V. Cloze (20 points, 1 for each)

Directions: There are 20 blanks in the following passage. For each blank there are four choices marked A, B, C and D. You should choose the ONE that best fits into the passage, and then mark the corresponding letter on your ANSWER SHEET.

Every Chinese language textbook starts out 121 the standard phrases for greeting people; but as an American, I always found myself unable to speak freely when it 122 to seeing guests off at the door. Just a good-bye would not do, yet that was 123 I had ever learned from the terrible books. So I would smile and nod, bowing like a Japanese and searching madly for words that would 124 over the visitor's leaving and make them feel they would be 125 to come again. In my unease, I often hid behind the skirts of my Chinese husband's kindness.

Then finally, listening to others, I began to pick up the phrases that eased relationships and sent people 126 not only successfully but also skillfully.

Parting for the Chinese 127 a lot of necessary habitual practice. Although 128 a foreigner, I'm not expected to observe or even know all the 129, I've had to learn the expressions of politeness and protest at a leaving-taking.

The Chinese feel they 130 see a guest off to the farthest possible point—down the flight of stairs to the street below or perhaps all the way to the 131 bus stop. I've sometimes waited half an hour or more for my husband to 132 from seeing a guest off, since he's gone to the bus stop and waited for the 133 bus to arrive.

That's very well, but when I'm the guest being seen off, my protests are always 134 . My hostess or host, or both, insists on 135 me down the stairs and well on my way, with my repeating the "Don't trouble to see me off at every landing." If I try to go fast to 136 them from following, they are simply out to the discomfort of having to 137 after me. Better accept the inevitable.

Besides, that's going 138 Chinese custom, because haste is to be avoided. What do you say when you part with someone? Not "farewell or Godspeed", 139 "Watch your 140 ", or some such caution, but translated literally it means "Go slowly."
